

Pedro Parra

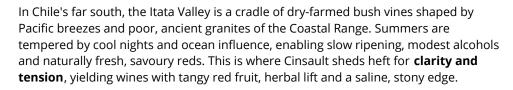

Named for John Coltrane, this cuvée plays an improvisational line: lifted aromatics, fine-chalky texture and a long, mineral finish that showcases Guarilihue Alto 's coastal energy.

Trane Cinsault 2018

Itata Valley, Chile

Region and Vineyards

Trane comes from a single old-vine parcel in Guarilihue Alto (zone of Tinajacura), planted around 1944 and rooted in red, decomposed granite laced with quartz and iron. The silty-sandy matrix drains quickly and limits vigour, concentrating small berries and fine, linear tannins. The site is farmed organically and dry-grown, with hand work throughout. Elevation and exposure protect acidity and preserve the vineyard's signature: vertical structure, perfume and mineral persistence.

Winemaking

Trane 2018 is 100% Cinsault. Grapes were hand-harvested and brought to the cellar for a minimalist vinification that foregrounds site over technique. Fermentation occurred with native yeasts in raw concrete; approximately 30% whole bunches were included to enhance aromatic lift and structural tension. Extraction was gentle—more infusion than force—favouring perfume, texture and line.

Élevage followed in a mix of large, untoasted foudre and concrete for roughly 12 months, providing micro-oxygenation without overt wood flavour. Bottling was carried out with minimal handling (no fining and only light filtration if needed) to retain purity and the vineyard's granular, stony feel. The result is a Cinsault of precision and poise, with juicy flow, chalk-fine grip and notable ageing potential over the mid-term.

Tasting Notes

- Color: Medium ruby with a translucent core and youthful violet rim.
- Aroma: Wild strawberry, cranberry and cherry, edged by rose petal, thyme, white pepper and a cool, rocky undertow.
- Palate: Sleek and vibrant; succulent red fruit rides bright acidity and powder-fine tannins. Mineral drive elongates a savoury, saline finish with gentle herbal resonance.

Did you know?

Pedro Parra names his single-parcel wines after jazz legends. Trane honours John Coltrane, mirroring the vineyard's "vertical" profile—tension, tempo and complexity—shaped by decomposed granite and old, dry-farmed vines.

Wine Pairing Ideas

- Herb-crusted lamb chops herbal rub echoes the wine's thyme and pepper; fine tannins match tender protein.
- Roast chicken with lemon & sumac acidity and saline snap refresh crispy skin and pan juices.
- Seared tuna with tomato & capers red fruit brightness and minerality play with Mediterranean savour.
- Mushroom risotto umami depth and creamy texture meet the wine's savoury, chalky line.

Robert Parker (RP): 93 Points (2018)

Pedro Parra considers John Coltrane an innovator and creative jazz musician, after whom he named the 2018 Trane, a single-vineyard Cinsault from a plot of highly decomposed granite soils. It fermented in concrete with indigenous yeasts and some 30% full clusters and matured in 1,500-liter oak vats for 11 months. It's extremely chalky and perhaps a little rounder and gentler compared with its siblings. It has a little more concentration and clout, but at the same time, it doesn't reach the elegance of the other two. There are some similitudes here, because they all come from granite soils that mark all of the wines very much. 1,188 were filled in March 2019.
