Region and Vineyards

The Peumo subregion of the Cachapoal Valley, nestled in Chile's Alto Cachapoal sector, is regarded as one of the country's benchmarks for Carmenère. Peumo's Mediterranean climate benefits from the tempering influences of the Andes and the nearby Rapel River, offering warm days and cool nights that extend ripening and preserve acidity. These climatic conditions allow Carmenère—a late-ripening grape—to develop full phenolic maturity, minimizing vegetal notes while accentuating fruit and spice.

Peumo's deep clay and alluvial soils retain moisture well, an advantage during increasingly dry vintages like 2020. The vineyard blocks used for Cordillera Carmenère are carefully selected for their low yields and balanced vigor, allowing Miguel Torres to highlight the grape's varietal character and its potential for structured, age-worthy reds.

Winemaking

The 2020 vintage was marked by climatic challenges—particularly low rainfall, spring frosts, and elevated summer temperatures—that reduced yields but concentrated fruit quality. Grapes were harvested between March 4 and 17, earlier than usual due to accelerated ripening. Despite expectations, acidity remained vibrant—offering a refreshing backbone to support the wine's intensity.

Fermentation was carried out in stainless steel tanks at 24°C over 15 days, followed by 20 days of maceration to extract color and supple tannins. The wine underwent 100% malolactic fermentation in French oak, softening its texture and integrating its spice notes.

Aged for 12 months, the wine matured in a combination of French oak barrels (81% second-use, 5% new) and 14% Austrian foudres, striking a balance between complexity and freshness. Bottling took place in May 2022, with the wine built to evolve gracefully over 8-10 years.

Cordillera de Los Andes Carmenere 2020

Tasting Notes

- Color: Deep garnet with purple hues, indicating richness and youthful concentration.
- Aroma: A vibrant bouquet of blackberries and cassis, laced with eucalyptus, laurel, clove, and black pepper, alongside hints of liquorice and leather.
- Palate: Plush and expansive, with round, ripe tannins and excellent mid-palate density. A layered retronasal finish of toasted bread and spices lingers with poise and length.

Did you know?

The Cordillera range by Miguel Torres represents the family's ambition to express individual grape varieties in their most emblematic Chilean terroirs. For Carmenère, Peumo was the natural choice—historically one of the oldest zones for the grape in Chile, it offers a rare combination of elevation, warmth, and water access, ideal for late-season ripening.

Wine Pairing Ideas

- Roast lamb with rosemary and garlic – the herbal spice of Carmenère beautifully complements aromatic herbs.
- Barbecue pork ribs – the wine's dark fruit and oak spice match the smoky-sweet glaze of grilled meats.
- Beef empanadas with cumin and olives – the savory pastry and umami filling balance Carmenère's plushness and subtle bitterness.
- Mushroom risotto with truffle oil – an elegant vegetarian pairing that highlights the wine's earthy depth.

Robert Parker (RP) : 91 Points (2020)
