Walker Bay, South Africa

Region and Vineyards

Ferrum Chardonnay is sourced from a single vineyard in the Shaw's Mountain area of Overberg, situated at 220 meters above sea level. The vineyard benefits from iron-rich shale soils, which naturally limit vine vigor and enhance flavor concentration. The climate, influenced by cooling sea breezes and its proximity to the coast, ensures slow ripening and preserves the natural acidity of the grapes.

This site mirrors the terroir of nearby Hemel-en-Aarde, offering similar conditions, but is technically outside the region. The vineyard's altitude and soil composition are key to producing a wine of elegance and depth, with vibrant acidity and complex aromatics.

Winemaking

Upon arriving at the winery, the grapes were gently whole-bunch pressed, yielding a clear juice that was settled before fermentation. Fermentation occurred naturally in 300-500-liter oak barrels, with 20% new oak, allowing the wine to develop texture and complexity without overpowering the fruit.

The wine remained on its lees for 10 months, gaining additional depth and richness. It was then bottled by hand, without filtration or cold stabilization, to preserve its intensity of flavor and character. This minimalist approach highlights the vineyard's terroir.

The name Ferrum reflects the vineyard's iron-rich shale soils, a key element in shaping the wine's structure and minerality. These soils naturally restrict vine vigor, concentrating the flavors in the grapes while maintaining balance and acidity.
